Bjóðar Føroyar til kav- bátastøð

Tað er eftirhondini hvørjum mansbarni í Føroyum kunnugt, at føroyski fólkaflokkurin fullkomiliga hevur hálsað um i verjupolitikki sínum. Flokkurin hevur vent lögtingssamtyktunum, um Føroyar sum hernaðarligt uttanveitað øki, bakið. Flokkurin gongur nú fult og heilt inn fyri limaskapi i NATO, og at vit skulu vera við til at bera allar skyldur, sum slíkur limaskapur hevur við sær. Ein av hesum skyldum er herskylda, hoast fólkaflokk-urin i stevnuskrá síni sigur seg vera ímóti slíkari. Nú er so komið undan kavi, at stavnamaður floksins, Óli Breckmann, heldur einki hevur ímóti, at Føroyar gerast kavbátastøð hjá NATO.

Politics gets a polite shake-up

While far across the water, in the United States, the presidential campaign is in full swing, the Faroe Islands are also engaged in a forthcoming political contest.

Faroe has traditionally remained neutral in terms of foreign outlook and dealings. But now this tradition has been upset. The man primarily responsible for this is Óli Breckmann, head of The People's Party in Faroe.

An Edinburgh educated man with faultless English and a flair for "good quotes", he has come to be something of a "sax" in Faroe, and even Danish, politics. A member of the Faroe parliament, the Løgting, and one of the two Faroe representatives in the Danish parliament, he is noted for causing controversy by accepting government invitations to Taiwan and South Africa, as well as for his comments on NATO and the Russians: "I hope you realize that the Russians could take us over before breakfast if they wanted to," he once said, with reference to the Soviet presence in Faroe, in the form of Soviet trawlers.

He was also quoted as saying: "I would rather have a missile in my garden than a Russian in my henhouse." Such remarks have helped make him notable and in many circles supportable but what has perhaps raised more eyebrows is his suggestion that Faroe should host a NATO submarine base. This would certainly be the positive affirmation of NATO that Óli Breckmann has been making the Faroes to endorse.

The islands are seen by Commander Olausgaard as the Danish Military Station on the island as strategically significant and this idea might be taken more seriously by NATO than by the people of Faroe.
